The most important global meeting for conservation professionals and students

26th International Congress for Conservation Biology (ICCB)
Connecting Systems, Disciplines, and Stakeholders
Baltimore, Maryland, USA • July 21-25, 2013

About the International Congress for Conservation Biology

The first ICCB was held in 1988 in Bozeman, Montana, USA. Since then, the Congress has been held in Africa, Asia, Europe, North and South America, and Oceania. Plenary sessions are presented by conservation leaders and visionaries. Each meeting features numerous symposia, concurrent sessions, workshops, short courses, and field trips. Past symposia have included such diverse topics as: the population biology of invasive species; global amphibian declines; how to integrate conservation research into policy; indigenous communities and conservation; and real-world social and economic solutions to preserve biodiversity.

Attendees

ICCB 2013 will bring together conservation professionals and students from every sector of the field, including the biological and social sciences, management, policy, and planning. Attendees work for universities, government agencies, non-governmental organizations, industry, private foundations and organizations, and publications. They are scientists, students, managers, decision-makers, writers, and other conservation professionals from across the world.

About the Society for Conservation Biology

Dedicated to advancing the science and practice of conserving Earth's biological diversity, the Society for Conservation Biology is a global community of conservation professionals with thousands of members from over 140 countries. The Society's membership comprises a wide range of people interested in the conservation and study of biological diversity: resource managers, educators, government and private conservation workers, and students.
We invite you to join nearly 1,500 delegates from around the world to sponsor, exhibit and advertise at the most important global meeting for conservation professionals and students.

Society for Conservation Biology (SCB) meetings are an international forum for addressing conservation challenges. They are the global gathering spot for presenting and discussing new research and developments in conservation science and practice. Most importantly, SCB meetings connect conservation professionals and serve as the premier networking opportunity for anyone interested in conservation.

“As someone who works on international ocean issues, being surrounded by so many international experts in marine science and conservation was like being a kid in a candy shop... Tea breaks were almost equally fruitful—faces were put to names, old relationships rekindled or strengthened and many new ones built as synergies were identified left and right.”
