

Jeremy Hance

Jeremy Hance is a freelance environmental and science journalist, focusing on wildlife, forests, climate change and indigenous people.

Currently, he writes a column for Mongabay called “Words on the Wild.” From 2015 to 2018 he ran a blog for The Guardian called “Radical Conservation.” He has also written for HuffPost, The New Straits Times, The Sydney Morning Herald, Ensia, and Yale E360 among others. He’s currently working on a book. Hance met his first Sumatran rhino, Tam, in 2009 — and has been writing about the species ever since, including two major series on Mongabay. He’s been interviewed by NPR’s Living on Earth (talking Sumatran rhinos), Escape the Zoo Podcast, Sea Change Radio, Mongabay Newscast and Zoo Logic podcast. When not traveling to the far ends of the Earth, Hance lives in St. Paul, Minnesota, with his wife, daughter, and two puppies.